Launch of Alludium at LangChain's AI Conference in San Francisco

Catenai PLC (AIM: CTAI), the AIM quoted provider of digital media and technology, announces that Alludium Ltd ("Alludium") has launched its early access program for its new AI Agent builder at Interrupt, LangChain's AI Agent conference in San Francisco held on 13-14 May 2025.

Alludium is a company in which Catenai has entered into a subscription agreement to acquire an initial shareholding of approximately 8% as announced on 12 May 2025.

Interrupt is the gathering for anyone passionate about the future of agentic AI. Consisting of hands-on workshops, live demos, and talks from industry luminaries like Andrew Ng, Adam D'Angelo, and Michele Catasta, it is the epicentre of innovation in the agentic AI space this week.

John Frizelle, Founder of Alludium, commented, "We're thrilled to launch Alludium's Early Access Program here in San Francisco at Interrupt, the Langchain Conference. We're building something fundamentally different-a platform enabling anyone to create collaborative AI teams that autonomously handle tasks, make decisions, and integrate with everyday tools without writing code. Unlike traditional chatbots, limited to conversation, Alludium agents actually do the work for you.

The Langchain Conference brings together the pioneers shaping the future of AI agents, making it the perfect venue to introduce our platform to the world. Our Early Access Program will give selected participants the opportunity to be among the first to build their own AI teams, whether you're a freelancer automating workflows, an entrepreneur building a business, or an enterprise seeking greater efficiency."
