Plus500 launches Single Stock Futures in the US

Plus500, a global multi-asset fintech group operating proprietary technology-based trading platforms, today announces the launch of Single Stock Futures, expanding access to CME Group-listed contracts.

The new offering enables Plus500 customers to gain exposure to a growing range of leading US stocks through futures contracts, including Micro Single Stock Futures, providing a flexible and capital-efficient alternative to traditional equity trading. Single Stock Futures offer key structural advantages, including capital efficiency through initial margin requirements and built-in leverage, alongside the ability to go long or short and trade well beyond standard exchange hours to act on market-moving news in real-time.

Plus500 will continue to expand its Single Stock Futures offering, adding new instruments based on customer demand, liquidity, and market conditions. This launch reinforces Plus500's commitment to delivering innovative financial instruments and providing customers with greater choice, efficiency, and control over how they access global markets.

David Zruia, Chief Executive Officer of Plus500, commented:

"The launch of Single Stock Futures, in collaboration with CME Group, is a further step in enhancing our futures offering and giving Plus500 customers greater flexibility to trade some of the leading US stocks. It builds on the momentum we are seeing across our non-OTC business, which also includes our prediction markets offering launched earlier this year, and reflects our ongoing commitment to providing innovative ways for customers to trade global markets. We look forward to broadening this offering as we continue to scale our US business."
